

AquaPhone'2018

Štúrovo, June 9th, 2018 (Saturday), 12:00 – 22:00

Motive

At the beginning of the nineteen fifties, the bridge between Štúrovo (Slovakia) and Esztergom (Hungary) was in ruins. It was almost impossible for relatives and friends on each side of the Danube to get in touch or communicate. People would go down to the river, mostly on windless evenings, to talk to each other. The water carried the sound of short messages, often encoded, to the other bank half a kilometre away.

The AquaPhone performance refers to this phenomenon, honouring all the lives whose secrets had at one time been entrusted to the Danube, recalling this testimony of people's yearning to talk together, and of their inventive genius bridging borders and distances under difficult conditions.

Alfred Zimmerlin and Markus Eichenberger took up the idea of Hanneke Frühauf and created a musical improvisation on the text for four persons written by Ilma Rakusa. The text will be read by speakers on both sides of the Danube and crossing it in the original German language and in Slovak and Hungarian translation. It will be accompanied by improvisations on cello and clarinet by the Swiss musicians.

In the supporting programme is the XIIth Bridge Guard Book Festival with participation of publishers from Slovakia, Hungary, and Germany. The event starts the Transart Communication project with an international performance on the Maria Valeria Bridge and in the pedestrian street. In the Bridge Guard residence, the 43rd bridge guard Leah Lovett from London will provide an insight in the works produced in Štúrovo. Tomáš Baka will present his just published book Štúrovo – Párkány. Máté Méri will read his text that won the Creative Writing Workshop in 2017. Mila Haugová will moderate a discussion with Ilma Rakusa. Máté Szabó improvises with electronic music. After the AquaPhone performance a jazz concert with Trio Hodek will conclude the day.
